COMMENT: (1978) This Chapter 34 replaces many narrowly defined crimes against property, which may or may not endanger human life or safety, and are found in the Penal Code, down to four (4) generally-defined crimes. Thus, we have aggravated arson, negligent burning and criminal mischief. The definitions are greatly expanded from those provided by the Penal Code. Thus, § 34.10(b) expands the concept of “burning” in the Penal Code to any “habitable property” which could include vehicle, vessels, schools, churches, hotels or any building in which people may occupy.

The classification of the standard of arson no longer reflects the value of property involved, but rather reflects the degree of risk involved to persons who may be the victims of the burnings. Actual harm to such persons will constitute a separate, crime, e.g., §§ 19.20 and 19.30 of this Code. The crime of “arson” does involve only the destruction of property or defrauding of an insure, without regard to any value attached to the property.

Due to the extreme risk which fire and explosion cause to both persons and property, the Commission felt that the crime of “negligent burning” shall be included in this Code. This is an exception to the concept that negligence will not create criminal liability, but the danger involved in the prohibited activity was deemed so great as to warrant an exception in this case.

Criminal mischief, § 34.50, creates a crime involving a wide variety of property-damaging conduct not characterized by the dangerous means (fire explosion) dealt with in the previous sections. § 34.50(b) is designed to deal with a variety of situations, for example, throwing a power switch, in which the gist of the harm is not damage to the property immediately effected but rather the threat of extended consequences. Criminal mischief penalties are classified according to the harm actually caused or intended to be caused by the defendant's conduct, except for the highly restricted “tampering” offense defined by Subsection (b) which is treated as a third degree felony because of the extremely serious risk with which it deals and the demonstrated dangerousness of a defendant who maliciously creates that risk.

§ 34.10. Definitions.

As used in this Chapter:

(a) Property means any form of real property or tangible personal property which is capable of being damaged or destroyed.

(b) Habitable Property means any structure, vehicle or vessel adapted for the accommodation or occupation of persons.

(c) Property is that of another if anyone other than the defendant has a possessory or proprietary interest in any portion thereof.

In the case of aggravated arson as a felony of the second degree, the court shall impose a sentence of imprisonment of a minimum term of five (5) years and may impose a maximum term of up to ten (10) years; the minimum term imposed shall not be suspended nor may probation be imposed in lieu of the minimum term nor shall parole or work release be granted before completion of the minimum term.
