Formula to determine equivalent single axle load mile

Sec. 0.5. (a) As used in this chapter, "equivalent single axle load mile" is a unit used to quantify various types of axle loadings into a single number. The number of equivalent single axle load miles that apply to a trip is the amount determined under STEP ELEVEN of the following formula:

STEP ONE: Determine the result of:

(A) the first or next single axle weight of the vehicle in pounds; divided by

(B) eighteen thousand (18,000).

STEP TWO: Determine the result of the STEP ONE amount raised to the fourth power.

STEP THREE: Repeat STEP ONE and STEP TWO for each additional single axle on the vehicle.

STEP FOUR: Determine the sum of the resulting amounts from STEP TWO and STEP THREE for all single axles on the vehicle.

STEP FIVE: Determine the result of:

(A) the first or next tandem axle group weight in pounds; divided by

(B) thirty-three thousand two hundred (33,200).

STEP SIX: Determine the result of the STEP FIVE amount raised to the fourth power.

STEP SEVEN: Repeat STEP FIVE and STEP SIX for each additional tandem axle group on the vehicle.

STEP EIGHT: Determine the sum of the resulting amounts from STEP SIX and STEP SEVEN for all tandem axle groups on the vehicle.

STEP NINE: Determine the sum of the STEP FOUR amount and the STEP EIGHT amount.

STEP TEN: Subtract three (3) from the STEP NINE amount.

STEP ELEVEN: Determine the result of:

(A) the STEP TEN amount; multiplied by

(B) the number of miles in the trip.
